Le QUESTION.

To-Morrow, 19c.

In this city, who will his intended departure. In this city, who will his intended departure. In the work and in doing this he had both legs caught and badly bruised about the calves. It is a wonder both of them were not broken. His timely intervention, however, doubtless saved the life of the boy, who, as it is, sustained painful, but not fatal injury. One of his ribs was broken, and he was badly bruised. The Old Dominion Fishing Club, from Richmond, arrived last evening. They report all well and having fine sport. regret to learn of his intended departure.

ens under the firm name of "Cheryble Brothers." In this connection I give a story told me by an old gentleman, who vouches for me by an old gentleman, who vouches for its truth:

One bleak, snowy December day an old lady called upon Raiston & Pleasants and modestly asked of them aims. She was thinly dressed—her bare feet peeped out of her well-worn shoes, her chattering teeth told better than words her tale of woe. There were several gentlemen in the office at the time, Mr. Raiston amongst the number. With an air of great sympathy for the needy applicant he quickly dislodged a file bill from his pocket and placed it tenderly in her hands.

As soon as the old lady quitted the place a gentleman remarked to the bourtiful giver. "That's money thrown away; that old lady is not in distress; she is a learn beggar, sir." Mr. Raiston immediately replied: "Her appearance, sir. Is to me the best evidence of her need and her distress—he gives twice who gives quick-ly."

The elder Chevallie, father of P. J. Chevallie, the well-known mill-owner of antebellum days, was a native of France, who settled in Richmond some time during the latter half of the last century. His manners had been formed amid the best society of his country, and were en rapport with those of the best society in Virginia. He was altogether a preux chevaller-one of that class which is fast becoming extinct in France, and is no longer to be found in Virginia.

Narrow Escape from a Fatal Accident at Cobb's.

COBE'S ISLAND, VA., via CAPE CHARLES, VA., July 25.—(Special)—What came near proving a fatal accident occurred here on Rev. Thomas Dixon's yacht this morning. Mr. Dixon was returning from fishing with his wife and two other ladies. While he was docking his boat a strong ebb tide cut her stern down against and under the wharf, and Clarence, the colored boy, was returning from gasinst and under the was taking. Mr. Chevallie held the lineside course of the pavement next adjoining an open cellar, and observing from the furious heaste the fellow was in that a collision might occur unless he yielded a part of his way, paused a month to give a clear passage to his man. On the contrary, the more space was yielded, the more was demanded. In short, the countryman jostiled so rudely the old gentleman as to throw him clean of his balance. Chevallie disappeared in the cellar-pit, the bumpkin disappeared from the seene. Some gentlemen who saw tho unfortunate remontre ran to the rescue of the faller man. Though bruised and shaken by the fall, it was discovered and shaken by the fall, it was discovered.

Observing this expectation, a gentleman remarked: "Mr. Chevalile, that man is gone." There was amazement and ineffable contempt in the expression of Chevalile's face as he replied, "And he no make an apology!" Reminiscences of Men Who Were Prominent Here Before the War.
My attention having been called to a touching tribute to the memory of Gabriel Ralston—which any one may read on the marble shaft which bears its inscription—I visited the hallowed ground of Shockoe Warehouse. My adversary, after hurling a missile at me, would spring quickly and adroitly under cover of a corner, whence he would suddenly appear to repeat his attacks. On the contrary, I fought in the open street, advancing as I fought, when, taking good aim, I hurled at length a peblo of the size of a hea's egg straight at his head. Observing the motion I made in hurling the stone—he was a born fighter—he again sprang under cover, when, is my dismay, the missile intended for him struck straight into the letten of a gentleman who appeared in the place the boy should have been in.

When a boy of 19 or 12 years I became engaged in a "rock battle" with an urch in of similar age, near the precinct of the old Shockoe Warehouse. This monument is erected by his surviving business and social partner for more than half a century, without a jostle on the long journey.

The Dry-Goods Market.

NEW YORK, July 25.—Business was brought to an early close to-day. There was nothing to improve the previously prevailing dulness, it can bardly be said that the week has been of a disappointing character in the primary market, as few seifers were looking for an appreciable improvement in demand, but in the jobbing trade it closed with some unfulfilled expectations. There has been no appreciable change in prices.
